

Glass Marbles

Meredith finds herself without anything to do for the summer, no boyfriend, no job and things just not turning out the way she planned for her high school summer. Her parents are very busy with their own lives and no help to her in finding something to occupy her time. Things suddenly seem even more bleak for Meredith and her only option for something to occupy her summer looks very uninteresting to her. Without much choice, Meredith finds hope and thankfulness in the strangest of places, working with Down Syndrome children. This short story will engage any teen to younger adult and offer hope and encouragement to its readers.
