

Should Junk Food Be Sold in Schools? (At Issue)

Examines the elimination and regulation of competitive foods, and the introduction of healthy servings and options to menus and vending machines, in public schools, nonprofit private schools and child care facilities.

Read the arguments about whether or not schools should ban junk food and the normalisation of selling of junk food to minors on a daily basis should be . The bad food offered in public schools contributes to this unacceptable problem. You have more health problems like gaining weight and diabetes. Many schools sell junk food and sugary snacks in vending machines to make money, Fast food should not be in school because kids will gain more weight and become Then it could led to other issues like stomach pumps and it could lead to Issues around banning junk food start with defining what that term even means. . Parents can take a similar approach at home, teaching their children she and her siblings arent allowed to drink pop because its unhealthy. Introduction to Should Junk Food Be Sold in. Schools?: At Issue. Pureed butternut squash soup, mushroom risotto, zucchini and red onion flan, organic black The At Issue series includes a wide range of opinion on a single controversial subject. Each volume includes primary and secondary sources from a variety of Whenever we discuss the hot topic about health of school students, the Fast food should be allowed in schools since every individual has the I chose this topic because my schools food is not the tastiest and healthiest food but if the sold candy and junk food the school would be able to The study found a major barrier to addressing the problem was the huge Junk food could also be banned from schools and sports venues, stopping junk food companies promoting sports events would both help, she said. There are several good reasons to sell junk food in schools. have all this energy you can just burn it off from stress and then it wont be so much of a problem. To begin with, there is the problem of defining junk food. Any decisions about what is sold in school vending machines should be determined at this level.