

A CHIVALRIC ROMANCE AND WINNER OF THE WATTYS AWARD 2015 He bowed to her as only he knew how, but she didnt curtsy. He rose to find her beautiful eyes looking him up and down as if he were something outrageous, and there was no smile on her face as there was on his. The prince rather wished, at that moment, that he had worn the cap with bells, for he might have danced a jig to outrage her further. Her rudeness returned his usual sardonic manner to him. Welcome, mlady, he said, bowing again on purpose. Thank you, mlord, she replied, still frowning, still without a smile. The world is changing. After decades of war, Tibold emerges as the leader of a new, powerful kingdom, and the benefits of peace are soon felt. But King Tibold has a problem: his son and heir, the clever Prince Tameas, doesnt want to be king after him, and neither does he want to marry Lady Isobel, daughter of the warlike duke of the north, with whom an unbreakable alliance is needed. And Lady Isobel is already in love with the valiant Sir Harry. A man with pride, a woman with prejudice. Together they must keep a kingdom safe.
